

KEYSTONE STATE'S LEGISLATURE ENDS
SESSION TOMORROW

Disagreement Marks Meetings; Executive's Program Wrecked

WIND LOOSE ENDS

Move of Senior Branch to Adjourn Today Was Blocked By the House

By William B. Brown
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

HARRISBURG, Dec. 29.—(INS)—Pennsylvania's extraordinary legislative session, called by Gov. Gifford Pinchot to consider unemployment relief, will become history at noon tomorrow, leaving behind it little more than the wreckage of the Executive's elaborate program and a firm answer in the negative to proposals for additional taxation.

Decision on adjournment sine die was reached at an early hour today after the two branches disagreed for a time, the Senate planning originally to quit the Capitol finally at noon today.

In short sessions today and tomorrow the assembly will wind up its loose ends which leaders want enacted and then will be in a position for prompt adjournment.

The move of the senior branch to adjourn today was blocked in the House. That action will permit passage of the Moore bill to delay sale of unseated land for delinquent taxes and also the Bechtel house bills to limit the penalty and interest payments during the current business recession.

Instead of the elaborate taxation, bond flotation, and special aid program which the Governor submitted to them on November 9, the lawmakers after agreeing upon their own program, passed the Talbot bill to appropriate $10,000,000 to the county poor districts for direct relief.

Except for a shifting of appropriations previously made, the Talbot bill is the only step taken by the Legislature to meet the present unemployment situation. Branded by both the Governor and his attorney general as "unconstitutional and vicious," the bill now faces an immediate test before the State Supreme Court before any money will be paid under its provisions.

The Governor's program faced a rocky road from the time he submitted it to the Legislature until it died almost complete in House and Senate committees. Few of the provisions survived committee frowns to struggle forth to even more dismal defeats before either House or Senate.

When members of the Legislature at this session discovered that the Pinchot program would call for the expenditure of over $100,000,000, all of which would be paid, directly or indirectly, out of taxes, the entire plan was frowned upon.

Not in the Senate, as in the last regular session, but in the House, then the Pinchot stronghold, did the Governor's plans meet with roughest treatment. Taxes on cigarettes, gasoline, billboards, and so-called "prosperity bond issue" all met defeat in the House. No major bill of the Pinchot program ever reached the Senate where his foes are entrenched.

The Musmanno resolution memorializing Congress to pass a bill appropriating $5,000,000,000 for expenditure on public works was passed by the House at last night's session. Rep. M. Musmanno, Allegheny, made an impassioned plea for passage of the measure.

Three weeks ago the sponsor endeavored to have the House discharge the rules committee from further consideration of the resolution, but his efforts were futile. Just before the recess the committee reported the measure to the House and its adoption last night followed.

The resolution endorses the efforts of William Randolph Hearst to have Congress pass a $5,000,000,000 appropriation bill.

Death a Puzzle

Mystery enshrouds the death of John J. Visser, vice-president of a Chicago savings bank. Police believe that the banker shot himself after a quarrel with Antonias van Worden, an investor, during which it is surmised he attacked the latter with a lead pipe. The theory is that Visser, believing himself to have killed Worden, committed suicide. However, that is only the police reconstruction of the affair.

HOPEI, MANCHURIA, Dec. 29.—(INS)—This isolated point along a bend in the Liao River between Newchang and Tientehwangtzi, which also is a station on the Peiping-Mukden branch line, was a scene of the liveliest activity today.

A military track was laid at this point and a thousand Chinese coolies, working on both sides of the river, were employed by the Japanese to keep supplies moving up to the Japanese punitive expedition. Huge cranes, big enough to lift locomotives, were brought here from Dairen to assist in the movement.

Railway repair equipment and military provisions were being sent across the river. Scores of cows were used for this, proceeding behind icebreakers which cut the way through the crevasses and chunks of ice.

Several hundred Japanese railway engineers arrived and immediately went to work in laying down the tracks.

INSPECTION PERIOD FOR AUTOS TO BE IN FORCE JAN. 1ST

Second Period Will Open July 1st and Close September 30th

ARRESTS TO BE MADE

Three Months' Enforcement Will Follow Each Period, is Plan

Operators and owners of automobiles are advised that the first of two periods for the compulsory inspection of motor vehicles is January 1st to March 31st. The second period starts July 1st and closes September 30. Each period is to be followed immediately by a three months' arrest period. Approximately 4300 permanent official inspection stations have been appointed throughout the State by the Department of Revenue.

Motorists of this section should familiarize themselves with the law and comply with its stipulations.

The basic principles of these inspections is an attempt to prevent and reduce automobile accidents, and any other consideration should be subordinate to that end. Secretary of Revenue Clyde L. King has advised station owners. Such stations as have been appointed, have at the time of their examination by the State Highway Patrol, appeared to meet the Department's requirements, he said. On their applications for appointment they have pledged themselves to conduct honest, thorough and efficient inspections.

The Vehicle Code provides the authority for the withdrawal of appointment of any station failing to comply with the official regulations or whose business is being improperly conducted. During inspection periods, State Highway patrolmen will make regular inspections of the appointed stations. This is to determine whether or not the purposes of the inspection campaign are being rightly served.

In accordance with Governor Pinchot's proclamation issued October 27, every resident owner of a motor vehicle being operated in Pennsylvania, except motorcycles and bicycles with motor attached, must submit the vehicle to inspection at a designated inspection station. If the vehicle is found unsafe or unfit for operation, it must be put in safe condition, or reported at once by the inspection station to the Department of Revenue for investigation as to the possibility of withdrawing the registration.

"It must be understood that any motor vehicle owner is free to select his own official inspection station, and is not obliged to have needed work done at the station where the inspection was made unless he so elects," Benjamin G. Eynon, Commissioner of Motor Vehicles, said. "However, the Department will require a report on every motor vehicle presented for inspection, even though the owner may desire only to delay the repairs temporarily."

"In accepting appointment these stations obligate themselves to make thorough inspection; to affix certificates of inspection (windshield stickers) only to those motor vehicles which have been inspected and passed as safe; and to make the necessary reports to the Bureau of Motor Vehicles."

Stickers and report forms for the campaign will be serially numbered and padded in combination. The sticker placed on a car will bear the same serial number as the report form submitted for that car. A series record of stickers issued will be kept by the Department. This is to prevent the sale, exchange or gift of stickers.

Official inspection stations will be required to make a report on every car presented for inspection. If the necessary repairs or adjustments are not made or if the owner attempts to delay the inspection, stations will be required to make a report and attach to it the unused sticker.

The same regulations will be in effect as in previous years with respect to Pennsylvania cars having been out of the State during the campaign and subsequently returning to Pennsylvania. They will be required to have inspections made

FOREIGN LOANS

Prominent financiers, called before a senate investigating committee, seem to have spiked the suspicion and rumor that American banks are holding an embarrassing amount of foreign securities and to save themselves are lobbying and propagandizing for more debt moratoriums and even war debt cancellation.

The most significant discoveries made by the committee were that no bank is at the mercy of its foreign securities, that foreign bonds floated here since 1920 have been largely absorbed by the investing public, that the bankers are not alarmed by the foreign financial situation and that a large part of the money borrowed in the United States by foreign countries was spent for American goods.

Witnesses freely admitted that they would like to see private debts paid before public debts and further revision of the war agreements, expressing the opinion that business recovery depends upon both. The banks would benefit with all other business if following that course brought the desired results.

As a mild bit of recrimination against their accusers in the Senate, who had charged among other things that the banks have been neglecting their own people and country in favor of foreign borrowers, the bankers agreed that the domestic situation needs attention and that relief must come largely from congress. One form of relief suggested is congressional approval of a credit corporation to extend financial succor to the hard-pressed railroads.

LOOKING FORWARD

There will be no moaning at the bar when the year 1931 puts out to sea. It is a year of few happy memories, a year of hardships and anxiety and distress. Nobody bade it come and everybody gladly speeds its parting.

All the world will strive to forget the misfortunes and disappointments of this unhappy twelve-month, yet, if it is wise, it will not soon forget the lessons it has taught. Sad experience has taught many bitter lessons since last New Year's day.

This generation should be the wiser and stronger for having gone through such a year. It now ought to know by rote what those sweet uses of adversity are. Fewer illusions and prejudices remain to blind the unwary. Though none will be so naive as to believe that man will never again make the economic, financial and political mistakes which brought him so much woe this year, it is not placing too much confidence in the animal to say that he will not repeat them in 1932.

No appraisal of the year now closing can be adequate without taking these things into account. They are the little assets set against multitudinous and momentous liabilities, but properly invested in the years to come they will pay good dividends.

It is well, and a hopeful sign, that all eyes are now turned away from the old year and toward the new. Every member of the 1931 graduating class of the school of hard knocks is the better prepared for whatever the year 1932 may bring.

SYNOPSIS

Young and beautiful Fanchon Meredith leaves San Francisco by airplane to escape arrest in connection with a murder in which her sweetheart, Tony, is implicated. She had not known that he was a gunman. Evelyn Howard, whom Fanchon had met on a voyage from Hawaii, is aboard. She is enroute to New York to live with her wealthy aunt, Mrs. Allison Carstairs, whom she has never seen. The plane crashes and all but Fanchon are killed. Grasping the opportunity to start life anew, Fanchon goes to the Carstairs home as Evelyn. Mrs. Carstairs' affection wins her heart. At Southampton, awaiting the arrival of her son, Collin, Mrs. Carstairs warns Fanchon not to take him seriously. He arrives and accuses Fanchon of being there under false pretenses. Collin objects to "Evelyn." Fanchon learns that Evelyn had indiscreet affairs with a naval officer and a native. Fanchon's sincerity in explaining that "her" indiscretion was only folly overcomes Collin's antagonism. A warm comradeship ensues and together they spend a happy summer.

CHAPTER XVI

From enmity and armed truce she and Collin Carstairs had grown into a very fine friendship. She was grateful to him for taking her at her word and for never, by word or sign, referring again to the original clash of their meeting and its cause. She and he had a mutual bond in their great love for Jennie Carstairs; they also liked the same things, laughed at the same jokes, were responsive to the same chords of beauty.

They were perfectly mated. And she knew, lying there, trying to picture a world without him, even with Jennie, that she had fallen in love with him. Not suddenly, wildly, girlishly, as she had with Tony. Not unthinkingly, not even romantically. Not perhaps fallen into love at all. She had rather grown into love, through friendship . . . all the long lazy, sunny summer through. And it was a mature love which twisted her with agony upon her bed as she lay listening to Emma's soft footsteps, listening to the sea outside of her open windows, to the laughter of someone on the grounds.

It was unthinkable. In the first place she was an imposter. She was not Evelyn Howard. And had she been Evelyn Howard the barrier of blood would have stood between her and the consummation of her love.

Only by telling him who she was, only by confessing to him that she was not Evelyn, could that barrier be removed. And that step she was not prepared to take and could not take taking.

The enormity of her offense came to her more and more clearly. If, she thought, wildly, Collin would only go away as he had said he would do, and go away quickly, she could perhaps win back to peace again, with Jennie, with Jennie's kindness and love to protect her. But now every step she took seemed charged with peril, at any moment the ground might open and swallow her up.

She knew that Collin loved her. She was a perfectly modern girl; men had loved her before; she knew the symptoms. She faced them. She would not hide behind a pretense of not knowing that he cared.

She made it, for the rest of their stay at Southampton as difficult as possible for him to be alone with her. There always were others. She was very popular in the colony with the girls her own age as well as with the men. Mrs. Carstairs watched the evidences of this popularity with growing pleasure and pride.

"Evelyn could have any man in Southampton," Jennie said one day to her son.

"I suppose so. And no one's good enough for her," he growled, unthinkingly.

His mother smiled, quizzically. He looked up and caught the expression. "Oh, I know what you're thinking," he confessed, smiling wryly in his turn . . . "but after knowing her, no one could believe all that rot! A lot of dried-up old spinsters. I suppose, putting the wrong interpretation on everything."

For the rest of their stay Collin devoted himself lightly and casually to one of the pretty girls he had known for some time.

"That's what I thought . . . from the beginning," his mother said, placidly, but now his tone caught belatedly at her heart and she said, quickly, the placidity gone: "Oh, Collin—dear!"

He knew then. Knew that she knew. He said, with half a groan: "I know. I—what can I say or do? I'm sorry, mother."

For an instance Jennie Carstairs regretted wildly that she had ever asked Evelyn Howard to come to them. Much as she loved the girl and she did love her very deeply, her son came first. Collin must always come first. That her own innocent act of generosity and duty of atonement, she admitted, had been the cause of unhappiness to him, was very bitter to her. But there was nothing she could do. She said, gently, sorrowfully.

"Evelyn is my sister's child. Your cousin."

"I know." He rose from his chair in her small sitting room and paced about the floor, restless as one of the wild graceful creatures he had killed on his hunting trips. "I know. Don't think I haven't thought of it. Don't worry, mother. I'll see it through. Never tell her. She'll never guess. And—I'll go away after you are settled in town."

Jennie said nothing although her heart sank to lose him again. She had always suffered deeply, it silently, when he went from her on one of his vagabond trips. This time she would have Evelyn, she reminded herself. The daughter she had always wanted. But if she hadn't had Evelyn, she would have been able to keep Collin beside her. She couldn't send Evelyn away, moreover, she cared too much for her to contemplate it. But—Collin must go, for whom she cared far more. It was a hopeless tangle, a vicious circle.

For the rest of their stay Collin devoted himself lightly and casually to one of the pretty girls he had known for some time and who gave strong evidence of delight at his attentions.

"Sally," said Jennie Carstairs to Fanchon, "Sally and Collin seem to be very devoted."

"She's awfully pretty," answered Fanchon, hating Sally Masters with all her soul.

Jennie looked at her sharply. But her face betrayed nothing. Perhaps it was all on Collin's side, then? If so, so much the better. But—poor Collin!

They returned to town late in September. Collin immersed himself in the business of his office, run for the most part as a rule by a very efficient partner. The partner came up to the apartment for dinner and promptly rang himself with an increasing line of suitors for "Miss Howard." Collin grumbled in his heart and was helpless. The apartment was lovely in those first days of fall. The move had been made without any upsetting or trouble, all of Mrs. Carstairs' household problems were not problems at all, things ran as if all were a well-oiled machine. Fanchon went to the shops, with Jennie to advise and instruct. She bought clothes, caring very little, now that Collin would no longer be here to see. Jennie gave her a little trotteur coat of soft, dark Russian sable; gave her, too, an ermine evening wrap. "You couldn't," she explained "do it on your allowance." And these things you must have.

Will You Help Those who are Willing to Work?

A number of men, women and girls of various vocations, who are willing to work but cannot find employment, have registered with the Bristol Unemployment Bureau.

Many of these have dependents and are the heads of families who find themselves in stringent circumstances during this time of depression.

A list of all such persons is available to those desiring the services of such a person or persons, regardless of the length of time for which such employment might be offered.

You are asked to make some sacrifice. Do your share by providing work for one or several days at your home or place of business.

If those who are able will give employment to these folks and thus aid them to earn that which they need, they will be accomplishing a two-fold purpose.

"SWIRL" VERY LATEST THING IN THE VOGUE FOR THE SHORT HAIR

Amusing Novelty is Streak of Light Hair, Cleverly Dyed

By Alice Langelier

(L. N. S. Staff Correspondent)
PARIS, Dec. 28.—Have you a little sunshine in your hair?

The most amusing hair novelty of the dull season is the streak of sunshine appearing on all pretty heads in Paris. The brunette looks stunning with a streak of sunshine yellow, which means a few strands of hair cleverly dyed to throw up the shade of her own true locks to better advantage. And the very light blonde has a streak of a more golden tint running through at any angle she chooses.

The streak, you see, is not always yellow. It may be a deep brown-orange, or, for white hair, a pale blue, mauve or even bright green strand.

Some of the smartest women are matching up their "sunshine streaks" with their newest ensembles, generally having it the same shade as their accessories.

Despite all the many changes in hair styles and all attempts to bring in long locks, short hair remains the favorite, but the shaping is different, the hair now being cut short all over without any parting so that it can be swirled in all directions.

The very latest vogue is the "swirl," a more studied coiffure than that called "curl blown." It is, in fact, a rather complicated arrangement, becoming to most women. The top of the head is kept flat with no part and the light curls at the side lie flat and can keep tidy for the back is brushed over to meet them and thus the face is softly framed and the forehead kept free.

Another new hair fashion is the swirl from the back to front. The hair is cut short and brushed from back to front where the ends form a sort of fringe of hair, entirely straight if desired, but very light.

IN HOSPITAL

A fractured leg was sustained by Mrs. Patrick Dugan when she fell at her home, Newportville Road, Croydon, yesterday. Mrs. Dugan is now at the Harriman Hospital.

Mrs. John Nelson, of 712 Pond street, is a patient at the Harriman Hospital.

ON SELECTED TEAM

Roland McCauley, right fullback of the Pawley soccer team of Bristol, members of the first division of the National League, has been selected as one of the members of the Eastern Pennsylvania State team, which will play a picked eleven from New Jersey in Philadelphia, next Saturday.

McCauley will be playing on his third all-star team having twice represented the National League in inter-sectional tilts. The first time he played against the Lehigh Valley League and last week against the Pennsylvania League eleven. In this game it was his great defensive work which enabled the picked stars of the National League to triumph by a close 1-0 victory.

COLUMBANS WIN FIRST GAME FOR THIS SEASON

By T. M. Jono

In an A. O. H. League fray played last evening the Columbans won their first game of the current season, defeating the Shamrocks, 33-29 in an extra period fray. "Chuckle" Connors tossed in the winning field goal after the game had ended in regulation time with the score 29-29. In the other fray of the evening the Gaels made it three straight by beating the league-leading Celtics, 22-16.

The Columbans-Shamrocks battle was bitterly fought from start to finish with the score sea-sawing throughout. It was the most furiously fought game since the beginning of the season and the victors were not decided until the final whistle of the extra period. No outstanding player starred in this battle, everyone playing with all that was in them.

"Eddie" Roe was the star in the Gael victory which stopped the Celtics' winning list to three straight. Besides scoring five points, Roe was a star on the defense. H. Brady played well for the losers.

Mythical Grid Title at Stake in Classic

What a New Year's dish for the gridiron fan! If there is such a thing as the football championship of these United States the question of who rates the title will be settled in the Rose Bowl at Pasadena, Calif., January 1st. There Tulane meets Southern California in the annual carnival classic. Recognized titleholders of the South, the New Orleans aggregation meets in Southern California one of the strongest teams in intercollegiate football history. This clash also brings together probably the greatest number of All-America selections ever to appear in one game. Tulane boasts its famed captain, Jerry Dalrymple, Don Zimmerman and Nollie Felts, while the Trojans point with pride to Johnny Baker, Ernie Pinckert and Orv Mohler. Tulane has gone through the season untied and undefeated but Southern California lost an early game to St. Mary's. This upset, however, is buried in the Trojan's remarkable record, including the victory over Notre Dame and the smashing of Georgia, 60 to 0. Eighty thousand fortunate football fanatics will witness the battle Story fame. It was written by William ("Boo") Wilson, a former well known resident here.

San Diego, California.
December 10, 1931.

Dear Arthur:
I am sending you under separate cover a San Diego Evening Tribune. You can see for yourself how far your fame has spread. I always knew that when you did bat one, it was sure to ride high, wide and far. But I never thought you could sock one so hard that it would land out here, in the land of continual summer, on the shores of the Pacific. Who knows, maybe, it only bounced here and kept on to Honolulu. Was glad to see that you are still upholding the "rep" of Bristol, which is noted for its champions.

Some years ago when the herring were so plentiful and men with dip-nets could be seen on both banks of the Adams Hollow Creek, I tried to find out the largest number of herring taken in one dip. The first man I asked was Morgan Whiteley. "Well," he said, "I don't really know, but I myself have taken 232 in one dip." Then the next man I asked was "Link" Hibbs, and he said, "I never heard, but I remember one night I was dipping back of the night school ('Pledge's bungalow'), and when I went to pull up my dipper I couldn't budge it. I threw all my weight on the pole, and it broke in three places. I went head over heels up against the night school, but I jumped up and ran down to the creek and jumped in; threw out the bows and had 17 herring still in the net."

Jones ("Jim") Jones said he once put a herring net over in Barra Creek, then had to row ashore, cut down Halley's fence, and use the fence rails for corks. George Saxton claims that he and "Tony" Shores were taking up a shad net one night, and when the boat was down to the gunwhale they had to cut their net in half, row ashore, unload, and then went after the other half of the net; took it up and there was still 157 shad in that half of the net. He did not state how many they had in the first boat load. I believe George is still living and you might ask him. Levi Allen claims he once caught a snapper that was the length of the Dorrance street pump trough. Hughie Harkins (I think it was Hughie) claims he once caught a bass up in the mill pond, and says that when he got it ashore the Pond level dropped down to low-water level. But it remained for a fellow called "Whitney" to say that he crowned "Patchem" Flynn the champion herring eater of the world. Here's his story: "Patchem" took eight nice herring and fried them to a deep rich brown. Then he sat down to eat with the herring to his right, and an empty plate to his left. Picking up a whole herring he started it into the right side of his

EXERCISED BEEFSTEAK

HAVE you ever heard about "daily dozen"? I'm not speaking of beefsteak on the platter—I'm going to get to that a little later; right now I'm talking about beef at an earlier stage. How many of you have heard of the Chicago man who walked young steers 450 miles, in order to find out the effect of exercise on the eating quality of beef? This man's name is Sleeter Bull, and he is a professor in the University of Illinois.

These steers weren't driven across a prairie. They walked 450 miles—and never more than a few yards from their starting place. Professor Bull and his associates rigged up a treadmill and made the animals walk the thing for one hour every morning, just as though they were taking calisthenics.

The experiments are still going on. When beef cattle are fattening for market, they are usually kept pretty closely confined. Exercise, it was supposed, makes their meat tough. Professor Bull has found that exercise doesn't toughen the meat one particle. The meat of the exercised animals didn't have a bit more gristle than that of the steers that stood around all day with nothing to do but think; it was just as tender in every way.

The last time I was at the University of Illinois, I looked up Miss Isabel Bevier. You know at Illinois they have done a lot of pioneering work in meats. Thirty years ago they made the first attempt to establish beef standards and grades that could be used by everyone in the industry. That work was really the foundation of the later work done by the United States Government in establishing standards and grades.

Miss Bevier was one of the pioneers in meat cookery experiments. She and Miss Elizabeth C. Sprague, also of the faculty at Illinois, now of the University of Kansas, wanted to find some precise method of roasting beef so it would always turn out exactly the same. In those days meat cooking was done by guesswork. You consigned the meat to the oven, shut the door, and hoped it would come out all right. Miss Sprague and Miss Bevier decided to do something about it. First, they had to have a well-insulated oven, so that an even heat could be maintained. They had one built. Next, they wanted to be able to know exact temperatures; sticking your hand in the oven wasn't their idea of a scientific test. But evidently there wasn't any oven thermometer, so they borrowed a chemist's thermometer and propped it up inside the oven.

Then they could take samples of meat and cook them all at exactly the same temperature in an oven. But still, there was something else to be done. Meat varied in size and thickness. If you only knew just how hot the center of that meat ought to be, and just when it reached that temperature, no matter what the size and shape of the piece—then you'd really know the meat was done.

So next Miss Sprague and Miss Bevier stuck a chemist's thermometer into the meat. And that really is the beginning of the new era of meat cookery.

What has this got to do with the price of beef?

Just this: the more easily and accurately you can roast meat, the less waste you'll have—and the less you waste, the more you reduce the cost of living.
